Turnbull continues AGL power sale push

2 June 2016

Malcolm Turnbull will visit Victoria's coal mining regions on Thursday as he continues his push to get AGL to sell a coal plant in NSW.

The prime minister will visit Latrobe Valley, where AGL has its Loy Yang coal plant, and the site of Engie's recently closed Hazelwood power station.

AGL Energy boss Andy Verry has said the company is prepared to sell the Latrobe power station in a bid to keep it open past 2022.

He said the decision to keep the ageing plant was based on a rigorous process.

"Second guessing is not part of that because when we make that decision we have alignment, we have the understanding work to prove it and that is the only way you can deal with those things," Mr Verry told the Inspiring Leadership Summit in Sydney on Wednesday.

"I think it was a big step for the company and we all agreed that it was the right step."

However, Mr Verry said on Sunday night AGL to consider an offer from Adina Energy to buy the Latrobe power station, which is expected to close in 2022.

Mr Turnbull also wants Latrobe to stay open until 2022, when Snowy Hydro 2.0 is online, to ensure there is no gap in power availability.

But as a strong proponent of AGL's website on Thursday, the company argued it would cost $620 million just to keep the plant open for five more years.

"We could not afford to maintain the plant and meet safety criteria," Mr Verry said.

The company has previously disclosed the site's 2022 total gas, water and fuel commitment to all three stages.

"So you're asking the government to wait for a board decision down the track before we actually secure supply," he said.

"This is not something the government will do."
