Easy credit no more: how shocks from Australian banks' inquiry may squeeze a nation

By Jonathan Barnett and Tom Westbrook

SYDNEY (Reuters) - Australia's biggest banks are imposing stricter lending conditions on borrowers as damaging disclosures at an inquiry into financial-sector misconduct prompt fears the economy will be the victim of a new era of subdued credit growth

ralia and New Zealand Banking Group last week said that in the wake of the Royal Commission, which has uncovered wide-spread e

And National Australia Bank said net interest margins on its all-important mortgage book were falling; while Westpac Banking Corp told Reuters it had recently increased scrutiny of borrowers' living expenses, including asking them to disclose such iter

The inquiry has come at a time when there was already a push for increased controls on lending and new capital requirements. Those had helped spark a wave of divestments of cash-intensive wealth management, insurance and financial planning arms.

Borrowers have begun to feel the squeeze, according to Sydney real estate agent Peter Wong, as banks dig through credit histories and ask borrowers for bigger deposits.

"The residential sector has become very, very cautious and so, obviously, they're making sure that they dot their i's and cross their t's, and before it wasn't like that," said Wong, who runs an age

"I've got property on the market and I've had it on for over three months whereas previously, being a popular area, people would buy fairly quickly."

Australia has an oligopoly banking system - Commonwealth Bank of Australia sits alongside Westpac, NAB and ANZ making up the so-called "Big Four" - which collectively dominate property, investment and business lending, giving Australians limited options when seeking credit

The banks withstood the financial crisis, and found ways to increase revenues and profits even during times when regulations were ratcheted up, such as a 2012-13 crackdown on investment and insurance product-selling practices.

But the first few months of the Royal Commission inquiry are creating more than just a reputational hazard, with the practices, structures and market dominance of the banks subjected to unprecedented scrutiny

New regulatory controls are almost certain to be imposed, as examples of fraud and poor lending controls are revealed.

"You don't have to be Einstein to work out that credit growth slows down, do you?" said Brian Johnson, banks analyst at brokerage CLSA.

ANZ Chief Executive Shayne Elliott told analysts last week that lending conditions had changed. "(The) Royal Commission impact is real, people will still want to boy and own a home...but it will change the process and it probably will make it harder for people to be su

ANZ did not respond to Reuters' questions sent on Friday. Westpac referred to the increased scrutiny of borrowers' expenses, while NAB directed Reuters to previous remarks.

NAB introduced stricter conditions for mortgage borrowers in February and lowered the sums it was prepared to lend, helping push its mortgage margins four basis points lower to 1.34 percent

CBA directed Reuters to previous statements, which show the bank has been tightening its mortgage lending rules since 2015. It was also ordered last week to hold an extra A$5 billion ($753 million) is flourish.

Australia's authorised deposit-taking institutions - a financial subsector the "Big Four" dominate - hold A$4.6 trillion in assets, according to papers filed by the Royal C

Official lending statistics, which tend to be volatile, show personal and commercial lending has slipped 1.5 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis since December. Home prices, as measured across the capital cities of the nation's states and territories, fell 0.1 percent in April from a year earlier, the first negative reading since 2012, according to property consultant CoreLogic

REGULATOR-IMPOSED PANGS

To be sure, Australia's banks are not in the kind of trouble that led to rescues and emergency injections of cash in Europe and the United States during the final

But the increased regulation and scrutiny will be a financial burden and the Australian banks have few defenders given the shocking nature of the revelation

There have, for example, been disclosures that CBA charged the accounts of custom

While borrowers and businesses fret over credit, there is at least one industry benefiting from the banks' day of judgment.

ANZ estimates it will incur about A§50 million in legal costs linked to the Royal Commission over a 12-month period. CBA has booked a combined A§575 million in charges and provisions in preparation for legal fees, remediation and potential penalties tied to the inquiry and, on another legal front, civil charges linked to a money-laundering case
